

Rotarian Profile: Randy Case

Randy Case initially joined the Rotary Club of Battle Creek which is celebrating its 100th anniversary, with multiple interests in mind.

He wanted to further connect with other business people within the community, as well as making himself available to be of assistance with community service needs.

When asked what he would say to a friend considering joining the Rotary, his reply was “It is a good group of caring people who are professional and fun”.

In reflecting on some of his learning experiences over the years, he spoke about being a part of Rotary International, a worldwide organization working together toward a common goal: the eradication of polio. Aiding Third World nations in providing clean water is another examples of some of the initiatives that he has observed and learned from.

More locally, the Anybodies playground creation at Bailey Park, student scholarships and the children’s Christmas Party at Full Blast are some of the community initiatives that stand out for him.

“It is always great see and hear from our local community high school kids when they are recognized in the Rotary Student of the Month.” He said. “For many of these students they have never received this type of recognition before.”

However, the item that however has had the most impact on him occurred at the international convention in 2008, where he observed how the many groups came together in exploring ways to address hunger and disease.

He believes that as a member he has received more than he has given to the organization.

An architect and owner of Architectural Plus Design, Inc. of Battle Creek, He has been able to connect to business opportunities, where his services have been solicited and used.
